comprising invited international presentations as well as a wide range of presentations from handpicked Nordic experts outlining the current state of development in Nordic nuclear risk assessment and preparedness, and examining and discussing implications and needs for the future. The seminar will follow up on the progress since the NKS Fukushima seminar in 2013, and feature the newest results of Nordic research and development. The Nordic status will also be put into international context. In the longer perspective, ideas and thoughts for future work and follow up from the industry, the authorities, expert communities and NKS should be the outcome of the seminar, in particular focusing on issues where nuclear safety and emergency preparedness work can go hand in hand.
